

Decentred Disclosures: a relative review

There are the things you do because it's your duty.
Sometimes unpopular - but you do them because it is in the national interest.

It's about saying if we want real change for the long-term, we need people to come together and work together - because we're all in this together.

We need to create communities with oomph - neighbourhoods who are in charge of their own destiny, who feel if they club together and get involved they can shape the world around them.

It's about unearthing the problems as they come up on the ground and seeing how we can get round them.

And I can announce today that it will be established using every penny of dormant bank and building society account money allocated to England.

We have already said we will create a Big Society Bank to help finance social enterprises, charities and voluntary groups through intermediaries.

Whether it is in building affordable housing, tackling youth unemployment, inviting charities to deliver public services...

We've got to get rid of the centralised bureaucracy that wastes money and undermines morale.

NUMBER ONE, LYC. 19.

It has turned many motivated public sector workers into disillusioned, weary puppets of government targets.

...don't always turn to officials, local authorities or central government for answers to the problems they face ...

It's about saying if we want real change for the long-term, we need people to come together and work together - because we're all in this together.

We are a country built on the bonds of family, community and citizenship and there is no greater example of the strength of those bonds than our great movement of charities and social enterprises.
